	The PML, or probable maximum loss, is a measure of casualty loss used in assessing earthquake resistance in the financial and insurance industries, and refers to the probability of the maximum loss expected to result from an earthquake. Although there is no single precise definition of PML, PML herein is based on the event of the maximum earthquake that can be expected to occur in the region where the subject building is located (probable maximum earthquake = PME: an earthquake of a size that has 10% or greater probability of occurring within 50 years = occurs once every 475 years) occurring and is represented by expressing the construction costs required to restore the post-PME building to its pre-PME state as a percentage of the total construction costs required to reconstruct the building (= replacement cost). The concerned measurement does not take into account the impact of the collapse of neighboring buildings or fire, water and other damages.
	Emergency Repairs	-
	Near-Future Repairs	-
	Far-Future Repairs	4,418 thousand yen (average annual cost of repair over the next 12 years)
